Listeria

The researchers then tested these two strains in a fresh poultry processing plant. Working with Ecolab Inc., UGA scientists used a foaming agent to apply the bacteria to drains.

"The foam adheres to the drain's surface and gives the good bacteria an opportunity to attach and grow in their new environment," Doyle said.

The drains were monitored for more than three months. The foam/biofilm mixture eliminated listeria in most drains to undetectable numbers for several weeks.

"In some drains, where there was a continuous influx of processing wastes, we were able to bring the numbers down dramatically," Doyle said, "but we couldn't totally eliminate the listeria."

Next, the UGA researchers tested the bacteria mixture in a ready-to-eat deli meat processing plant. The listeria numbers are much lower in these plants than in fresh meat plants.

Six drains were treated, and two were used as natu-
