 term performance as a private land speculator left a bad taste, as did his reluctance to report assets and avoid conflicts of interest. Cagle is likely to take firm steps to avoid the kind of shadow that has been cast over Perdue. The new lieutenant governor is already talking with aides about placing his assets in a blind trust — a move that the governor eschewed early so that he could pursue private business ventures without hindrances. Cagle also has taken a different approach in media relations. He promises to be an advocate of sunshine in government, thus staking out a position dramatically different from the secretive ways of both Gov. Perdue and Speaker Richardson.
